

The Morning Business

When the sun is in the sky, and the
dew is on the grass,
And the promise of the day is all
the sun has to give,
Then the day begins in the morning,
And the day is all the sun's to give.

Then the sun is in the sky, and the
dew is on the grass,
And the promise of the day is all
the sun has to give,
Then the day begins in the morning,
And the day is all the sun's to give.

The office of the commercial attorney was stifling, and a musty smell of old paper and ink was in the air. The attorney, a man of middle age, with a high forehead and a serious expression, was sitting at his desk, looking at a document. A young man, with a bright smile and a well-tailored suit, was standing before him, looking at the attorney with a mixture of respect and curiosity.

"I have a few sheets of paper," he said, "which I have written up for you. They are all very important, and I hope you will find them so. I have also a few more sheets of paper, which I have written up for you. They are all very important, and I hope you will find them so."

"I have a few sheets of paper," he said, "which I have written up for you. They are all very important, and I hope you will find them so. I have also a few more sheets of paper, which I have written up for you. They are all very important, and I hope you will find them so."
